

They presented an excellent compressor, an ice-working saw that are helpful in the farming. The Terentyevs expect the Italians to make a visit next summer as well. There are plain Byelorussians among Vladimir Lvovich's visitors who are grateful not only for the rest got there but also for the recovery with the help of nature. So, an elderly man has come to fish at the farming for some years from Svetlogorsk. Having come once he felt younger and healthier. High-blood pressure bothers him in the city and recedes and grants a respite at the farming. And for the sake of that he, a regular visitor, considers it a decent reason to visit the Terentyevs. Unfortunately, there are "barbarians" who cook and fry fish far too much and without compunction and it is thrown away just once bit. For them there are regulations which must be followed in the rest area of the farming. The main of them are careful nature and private property behaviour.

The Terentyev's always experiment with their main part of business – fish breeding. Thus, last year the farmer tried to feed fish with blowfly instead of mixed fodder. As is well known it contains high percentage of protein – 65%. Blowfly is raised with meat wastes that are obtained for guarding watchdogs at the cookery factory. Weight of the fish raised in that way is three times more than that of the fish fed with mixed fodder. Therefore, blowfly is used more this year.

The owners plan to build an incubatory shop with time (it is connected with fish moving to the stage of maturity, mass fishing and realization), to construct a shop to sell the product and a cafe with fish cuisine. Certainly, says Vladimir Lvovich, if we get help (for example grant-in-aid), the business will be developed faster as there is no fish industry in seven neighbourhood areas. Government bodies would not invest funds in private business. Such obvious ideas as outings for children to the fish farming are not supported and realized either. Vladimir Lvovich has recently written a letter to the mayor of Svetlogorsk describing the mentioned issue. The mayor has charged with a local environmental service to consider the idea. Official circumlocution has been started. Instead of giving a definite reply

It is hard to resist such fish (6 kilogram carp). And such fish can be caught with a fishing-rod is provided by the owner. You can see a camping site on the background.

Vladimir Lvovich has been said that his letter was lost.

And life goes by. Recently, the elder son, Lev Vladimirovich, has decided to run his own fish industry. Father has supported him; it makes the family happy because their son has enough strength to follow in father's footsteps.
